What will your life look like fifteen years from now?

Do you have a very good vision of your future? You may have a vague sense of what you want, things you would like to accomplish or relationships you hope to develop, but very few people can actually articulate what they think their life will look like five or more years down the road.

By looking at your life as a continuum rather than a single point in time, we call today, you can make the right plans about your lifestyle and for your loved ones. The decisions of each come with a price tag that will rely on your current and future income.

That's why it is important for you to not only envision your future but protect it. And the best place to start is with your income.

Your future income

Your income, when viewed over your entire career, will most likely be your single biggest asset. It is the source of funding today and every day for the remainder of your life. Your income will pay for a lifetime of purchases, both large and small; it will fund the needs, wants and dreams for you and the ones you love. If you see a spouse, a family, a house or a car in your future, you know the importance of your income. There is a lot depending on it.

The great news is that at this point in your life you have the most potential for future income. A very exciting place to be and to think about. But think about this: You and your future have the most to lose.

The chart below demonstrates the potential financial loss of future earnings if a person were to become permanently disabled. For example, a 35-year-old with an annual salary of $50,000 who experiences a permanent disability may lose up to $1,500,000 in potential earnings by age 65.

That is a lot of potential income. And a lot at risk. Your income fuels the engine that drives you into the future. Without it, your ability to fund the future you envision is in jeopardy. With so much income at stake, it's important to help protect it.

Consider what you will earn over your future career – and help protect it.

Protecting your future

Employer-provided group long-term disability benefits typically covers only 60% of your base salary.¹

A Radius ChoiceSM individual disability income (DI) insurance policy from MassMutual is essential personal protection that can help replace a portion of your income – including bonuses and commissions – with tax-free benefits, should you become too sick or injured to work for an extended period of time. This can help you keep your future secure, since disabilities can happen to anyone at any time. Once you purchase disability income insurance from MassMutual, should you become disabled and all policy requirements are met, benefits will be paid to you on a monthly basis, for your selected benefit period while you remain disabled.

How much protection do you need?

Disability income insurance helps reduce your disability income gap; in other words, the difference between your current income and any existing disability benefits you might receive – for example, from your employer-provided group long-term disability plan (GLTD), which typically covers only 60% of your base salary.² If you became too sick or hurt to work, could you create the future you want with only GLTD?

An affordable approach to funding the protection you need for the future

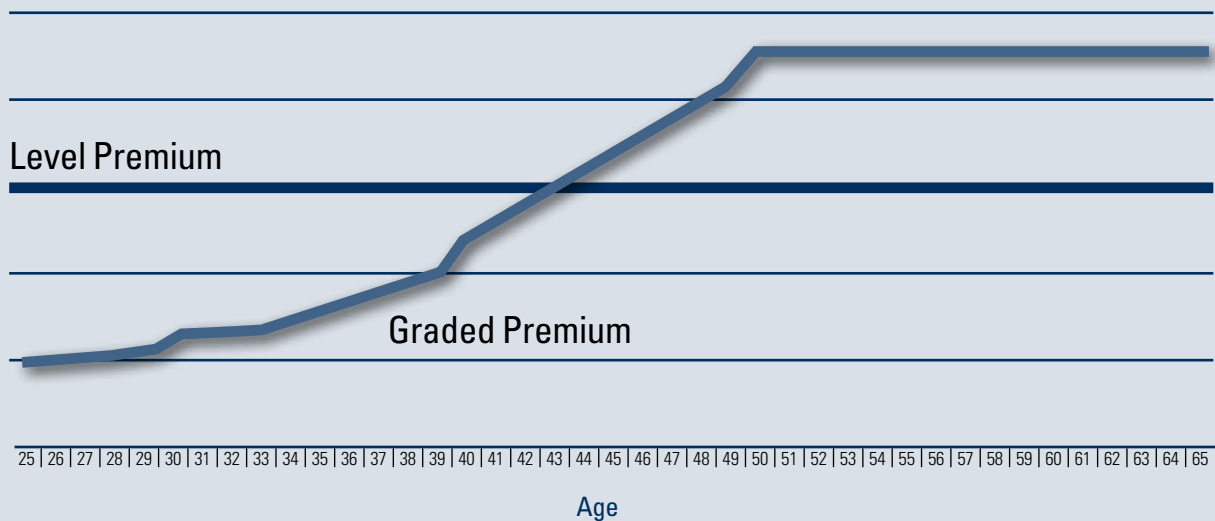

You may be ready to protect your future income but need a more economical approach to put a policy in place now. Consider graded premium.¹

Graded premium is a premium structure under which the initial premiums are less than a level premium structure for the early years of the policy. These premiums gradually increase each year until they become level at age 50 for the duration of the policy. Over the life of the policy, the cumulative premiums for the graded premium structure may be more than if the policy was issued with a level premium structure.

How it works

As the hypothetical chart below demonstrates, the graded premium payment structure, in general, begins at about 40% below the level premium option and increases incrementally each year until the premium amount becomes level at age 50 for the duration of the policy.

Hypothetical graphic is for illustrative purposes only. Actual crossover points may vary.

This type of premium structure is an option that can reduce the cost early in your career, allowing you to put the protection in place now and giving you time to get further established. Later, you can choose to convert to a level premium structure up until you reach age 40.

One in four 20-year-olds will become disabled before they reach retirement age.²

Designed with your future in mind

If you are a recent college graduate, you may be starting your career with sizable student loan debt. Defaulting on your loan due to a disability this early into your career could damage your credit well into the future.

Through the Student Loan Rider, you can protect your ability to continue your student loan payments in the event of a total disability. It can be an excellent way to help secure your future and your credit.

The Student Loan Rider allows you to receive a monthly benefit for the purpose of repaying your student loan debt during periods of eligible Total Disability.

Documentation will be required at time of claim to verify the benefit amount to be paid under the Rider. The Student Loan Rider has an additional cost.

Keeping pace with your future

Most likely, your vision of the future has you earning more income tomorrow than you do today. Your disability income insurance policy should be designed to keep up with increases in income.

Radius Choice offers two options to help you protect your future earnings increases:

- Future Insurability Option Rider (FIO)
- Benefit Increase Rider (BIR)

Each of these options help make additional coverage available and keeps the disability income protection up-to-date by providing you with the ability to increase the monthly benefit amount without proof of medical insurability. (You cannot be disabled, you must be working full time and financial underwriting is required.)

Simply put, as your income increases, you can elect to raise the amount of your monthly disability coverage to more closely align with your current salary.

Although these riders provide additional coverage opportunities, there are several important differences. Before choosing either option, talk with your financial representative to help you understand which option is best for you. The FIO rider has an additional cost.

Protect your future against partial disability

Average length of a MassMutual disability claim is 4 years.¹

How would your future look if you could only work part-time as a result of a disability?

Luckily, we have a rider for that.

The Extended Partial Disability Benefits Rider (EPR) is designed to benefit those who continue to work but, as a result of a sickness or injury, can no longer fully maintain their usual work schedules or some of the main duties of their occupation. Consequently, they are losing a portion of their income. EPR is an optional rider available for an additional cost.

Your future is worth protecting. Help secure you and your family's future by protecting your income.
